Spend time outside and put the screens down

The season of Spring gives us warmer weather. Days feel longer with more sunshine in the evenings. Weekends are filled with spring cleaning projects. Kids have field trips for school. Friends get together for outdoor BBQs. These are good things to keep us busy and can help to make us happy.

Many adults and kids continue to make too much time for their devices with screens. Phones and tablets are a choice. These items should not be the only choice. There are times when a phone or a tablet should be used. This is ok and not a problem. In many cases though a phone or a tablet is a poor choice compared to exercise or an outdoor activity.

Outdoor activities such as exercise or simply feeling the fresh air can give us relaxation and help our mental health. Springtime is a great time of the year to give yourself extra time outside when possible. Decide to 'trade' screen time for outside time. This change in behavior will likely be a positive influence for you.

Reach out to family and friends and share this idea with them to choose outside time instead of screen time. Springtime can offer many ideas to plan an outside activity with family and friends. A fun thing to do can be to take your phone with you on the activity with family and friends. Take some pictures during the activity. When you get home there might be an opportunity to share your outdoor activity on social media. This is ok and might motivate other friends and family members to get outside the next time they have the chance.

Here are a few outdoor activities to consider:

- Taking a walk in a local park.
- Choosing a location to have a meal outside.
- Read a book or a magazine while lying down in a hammock.
- Create an exercise schedule to include walking, biking, running, and/or yoga.
- Attend local sporting events and participate by cheering or volunteering when possible.
- Plan a family/friends get together at your house or in a local park.
