Support for opioid overdose survivors and family members

Opioid overdose creates trauma for the survivor. Survivors deal with a lot of emotions.

The emotions include:

- Embarrassment
- Anger
- Discomfort
- Guilt
- Gratitude

All survivors need support and treatment. This will help. Support can come from a family member. Support can come from a friend. Survivors should talk with others. They should talk about their feelings. They should talk with those they trust. This will help their recovery.

An overdose is also traumatic for others. This includes people close to you. Family members often feel sad. Family members think they should do more. They wonder what they could have done. They question things. One question is if they could have prevented the overdose.

Family members and survivors should work together. It is important to look to the future. Everyone involved should focus on getting help.

It is OK to ask for help. You should not feel bad about this. It takes real courage to ask for support. Survivors and family members should get advice. Resources are available. They could be local or national. They are also online.

Many things cause overdose. Usually it is an accident. The initial problem could be pain. It is often addiction. The problem is still there after an overdose.

The survivor should get an assessment. Magellan can help with this. See the contact listings on page one. You can call one of these assessors. A provider network is also available.

A family member can attend the office visit. This happens when the survivor gives permission. The assessor will talk to the survivor. He or she will suggest treatment. He or she will also suggest level of care.

The survivor should then meet with a provider. The provider will create a treatment plan. The plan should limit opioids. This will help to reduce the risk of future overdose. Each provider can also be part of the support team.

It is helpful to talk with other experts. This includes going to counseling. Survivors should think about this. Family members should think about this. Counselors offer healthy ways to reach recovery. Counselors are often a great support choice.

It can be hard to get started on your journey to recovery. Things will get tough at times. Survivors will face many hurdles. Staying in treatment helps. Here are some national resources.

Drugs, Alcohol and Teen Dating Abuse

Teens may feel peer pressure to drink alcohol or try drugs. Some teens take alcohol or drugs to cope with emotional pain. Emotional pain may be caused by one or more traumatic events.

Data¹ says that boys who report dating abuse are more likely to use marijuana or be antisocial. Girls who report dating abuse are more likely to:

- Smoke
- Have suicidal thoughts
- Be depressed
- Binge drink

Teens also may be coerced into using drugs or alcohol by an abusive partner to:

- Control them through drug or alcohol addiction
- Make them do things they would not normally agree to
- Keep them from reporting the abuse

A teen may feel afraid to report abuse if they were high or drunk. This may be because the teen is afraid of getting into trouble. They may feel ashamed or at fault. They may be afraid the person who did it will plan revenge. A local domestic abuse advocate can talk about ways to stay safer if more abuse is a risk.

No one deserves to be abused. It does not matter if they use drugs or alcohol. It does not matter what they say or do. It does not matter if they change their mind about what they agree to do. Drugs and alcohol do not make a person abuse their partner. Blaming abuse on drugs or alcohol is an excuse. There are people who can help teens who have been abused even if they were drunk or high at the time.

To find the domestic abuse program nearest you, visit <http://www.pcadv.org> and click on Find Help or use the Find Help map on the home page.
